Pioneers In Century Of Painless Surgery

The centenary celebrations of anaesthesia now taking place in Britain and the United States, mark the greatest single step in the scientific progress of medicine. For it is only since October 16, 1846, that a surgeon has been able to may to a patient before an operation "you won't feel any

Nitrous Oxide Hint

In 1800, Britain's Humphrey Davy wrote "as nitrous oxide seems capable of destroying physical pain it may probably be used with advantage in surgical operations," And in 1829 Michael Faraday, the great electrician, showed that ether was capable of producing unconscious-

public operation using sulphuric table. ether to prevent the patient feeling

In Britain, Robert Liston, famous surgeon of University College Hospital, London, used the same anæsthetic for amputation of a leg of a patient on December, 21 that year, and early in the following year, James Young Simpson, Professor of Midwifery at Edinburgh University, introduced it for both childbirth and surgical operations.

In those days however, sulphuric ether had many disadvantagesdifficulties of administration, an abominable smell, and bad after effects on the patient. Simpson therefore began to search for a better substitute especially for use in childbirth.

He found it—in a bottle of sweet smelling liquid which had been sent to him by Dumas, the celebrated French chemist, This fluid, first produced by the great German chemist Liebig in 1831, was chloroform.

cavery. Almost immediately afterwards, he used chloroform in a delicate operation on a little boy—with complete success. And very soon, with equally excellent results, :Simpson extended the new anaesthetic to his maternity work.

Opposition to its use in childbirth was first' made by the general grounds. The Bible, Genesis chapter 3, verse 16, was quoted against it "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth 100 acres they alrea ' own at Brinchildren." But Simpson neatly chang. SINGAPORE WAR ON HAWKERS

Singapore's fight against black market hawkers who are upsetting every rationing scheme, and unlicensed vegetable vendors, who are causing a serious health problem in crowded areas of the city, has entered a new phase.

Food Control Department inspectors and the Police are to step-up the frequency of raids on notorlous black market areas, says the Stralts Ralds are now being carried out dally and sometimes twice a day. Experience gained from the first raids carried out some months ago has been put to good use.

Several streets which formerly appeared impossible to clear of hawkers have been improved out of all recognition.

Systematic destruction of stalls belonging, to unlicensed hawkers of controlled goods has had a salutary effect, but the problem of "mobile" hawkers especially eignrette sellers, continues and these are being made the special object of present raids which will continue till something like the pre-war situation is arrived

Vegetable vendors present another problem which is being tackled vigorously.

Licensed Markels One object of the raids-to encourage vendors to enter the licensed temporary markets established close to their "business" areas—has been more successful recently. Cigarettes, biscuits, milk and other controlled goods, except perishable vegetables and foodstuffs, collected in the raids are stored in the Food Control office before disposal to distributors. Revenue from this goes to Government. Perishable foods are delivered

Phraseology Of Japanese Constitution

Four little words, inserted in the new Japanese constitution shortly before its passages, may some day be used to permit Japan legally to rearm, say Washington observers.

In the constitution, passed by the Diet and promulgated November 3, the Japanese people "forever renounce war as a sovereign right of the nation, or the threat or use of force, as a means of settling disputes with other nations." . As a consequence of this renun-
